TEENS' VIBE

What we are all about

By Asægwu Wisdom

We are young people with a passion to inspire teenagers; To make their world better than it is. To challenge the status quo. To raise Teen leaders with global mindset.

Being a teenager is one of the phases of life that's filled with all elements of this life that may never come back. Except, of course you want to reverse the hands of time.

We're young with no worries (Obviously that's just what everyone would like to hear but you're not worried, are you?) We've got the vigour and the energy. We're tough, we break limits, we want to explore. We want to be headliners with the different and amazing abilities we have. Everyone knows well that our voices can't be hid. We're the life of any place. We're vibrant.

As all these would sound amazing, its quite unfortunate that we'd never be a teenager forever. (I hate to mention this but I guess its the truth we have to mention. I like Marvel Cinematic Universe but later age may demand of me to quit watching them and follow the news 'cause there's business to take global)

I guess maybe I'd have to admit that sometimes we do have some worries. Expectations to meet up especially from God

What The Good Book says

1 Timothy 4:12

And don't let anyone put you down because you're young. Teach believers with your life: by word, by demeanor, by love, by faith, by integrity.

The Message Translation

So that you get a clearer idea

Let no one despise or think less of you because of your youth, but be an example (pattern) for the believers in speech, in conduct, in love, in faith, and in purity.

The Amplified Translation.

God and our Parents

We've also gotta get good grades.

Sometimes we'd need a little help and sometimes comfort with what's up in our lives. Sometimes with the beginning stage of Teen experience-

Puberty. (Just for the record, Teens are the only set of people who don't have hood as a suffix with reference with what this phase of life can offer) Then we also think, what are we going to do with our lives. [Most times this is when we say farewell to (You see if it was a child I'd have said 'Childhood' but lets

use) the teenage age] But all the way,

we've got to enjoy this phase 'cause it'd never come back. This is where Teens' to help, inspire and talk to each other.

ROSES IN THE ABYSS.

THE GENESIS: The year 2020 did start with many aspirations for most people. The beginning of a century and all the frizzle that came with it. We all had high hopes and dreams for this year but somehow the tables turned and not in many people's favor. The high hopes that we ushered the year in with turned to uncertainty-jobs lost, education halted, opportunities missed and most painful; friends and family who passed. The year has brought a huge shift in how our world is run and how we as humans habituate- a shift that most people found hard to cope with at first but we all seem to have incorporated into our way of living. Working from home, home schooling, being looked up at home- especially for extroverts like myself has been hard.

THE LIGHT: But what if, we begin to see this change in good light and actually acknowledge what positive impacts these changes have had on us. The situation has conformed us to our homes and subsequently more time with families. This has led to broken homes becoming mended and a strong emotional attachment between families. Relationships getting stronger. And one that has become so noticeable; how we have become more attentive to our growth- In any form. Spiritual growth, psychological growth, financial growth, vocational skill learning. It has become common to see status updates that read 'If you come out of this lockdown and you didn't learn anything you're not wise'. Truthfully, this lockdown has brought about a number of good adaptations

THE PATHWAY: Positive change does not come easily- In fact no change comes easily. As humans, we are naturally wired to be more sensitive to danger-the negatives. So we tend to spend most of our time thinking about all the negatives. How about we join the optimistic party, change our vision, push beyond the barriers that our natural man wants us to see. I want to acknowledge the strong humans whose work, school or daily activity served as a getaway from any form of abuse, but have had to be conformed to living in the same space with their abuser because of the tough times. Please speak up!. Find a trustworthy person or organization and report whatever is going on. Do not allow yourself to be subjugated to fear and misery. Continuously find ways to break free. You're powerful and have a purpose

CARIBBEAN RICE

Caribbean rice is neither jollof rice nor fried rice. You can never tell how this was made; you can never guess it until someone actually shows you.

DIRECTIONS

Parboil the beef cubes in a small pot with a cube of Maggi and pinch of salt. Add one cup of water and allow to cook until they are very soft.

Separate the beef from the stock, once well cooked.

Slice the carrot, plantain, green pepper, onions and beef (if that is not done already).

Fry the plantain (and chicken, if you like) and set aside.

Pour boiled water on 3 cups of rice, allow to sit for 3 minutes, wash and cook until it is 75 per cent done. Don't overcook it, or the food wouldn't turn out well.

Add two spoons of browning to the rice, stir evenly and set aside.

Set your cooking pot on heat and add 100ml of vegetable oil. Allow to heat for a minute before adding the beef cubes. fry the beef cubes for 3-5 minutes until it darkens. Remove the beef cubes and pour in the sliced onions, sliced green pepper, red bell pepper and carrot and stir. Add the beef stock, a teaspoon of salt, a cube of seasoning and a teaspoon of powdered pepper. Stir all together. Allow a minute, then transfer the coloured rice.

Turn evenly, taste for salt, you can add another cube of Maggi. Once the taste is good enough, add the fried meat and fried plantain.

Turn evenly, cover your pot and allow simmering on low heat for 3-5 minutes.

Serve your Caribbean rice with fried (or grilled, if you like) chicken.

THEORY OF NATIONS

THE TRANSCRIPT

BY PASTOR CHRIS OYAKHILOME DSc DD

I find that all around the world there are too many people who don't understand the definition of nationhood. It is sad that all over Africa particularly, many have not understood their reason for being.

Africa was always called the Dark Continent, not because of the colour of the skin, but because of the poverty of their minds. But the time has come for us to make the difference and we will.

In developing the "Theory of Nations", there are certain concepts that require mention and definition. All over the world, wherever the definitions of these concepts are nebulous, they are misused and usually leading to the sufferings of so many people.

These concepts are: Nation, nationalism, State and Ethnicity. To understand the development of nations, we must observe that man is a gregarious animal. Thus human beings naturally relate socially.

And as you know social relationships automatically define themselves in relation to strength and weakness; leadership and followership, because of the human tendency to protect or seek protection.

And so, the weaker congregate around the stronger to be protected. And this feeling of security heightens the weaker's ability to function socially. And so, naturally, the stronger demands further submission and allegiance, while defining the limits of freedom of the weaker of the species.

Certain nations like Nigeria have completely flawed the popular definition of "nation" as a large body of people organised under independent government and sharing common customs, origins, history and language.

Canada, also among others, cannot fall into this narrow definition.

As you know, Nigeria has a multiplicity of languages, diverse customs and culture, and a wide range of divergent history for its many peoples who definitely don't have a common origin.

Thus, by this definition, Nigeria will not qualify as a nation but a State only. And there are many countries all around the world that can only be described as States.

A state begins with the paraphernalia of government with a definite territorial jurisdiction. It is an institutional structure with territorial integrity. Thus without a defined land space, a State cannot function; whereas a nation need not to be territorial in nature.

As a matter of fact, the United Nations (which we call the UN), by its name, cannot be defined as it is called. It is more of an association of States.

States are bound together by law and force; nations are not created by law and force but by free consent of its members and the definition of their purpose.

States are static while nations are dynamic. Thriving states therefore are those who, through education and culture, have helped their people develop nationhood. A State is ready for prosperity and development when it delivers to its people a robust Bill of Rights, a sense of liberty and freedom of expression.

The purpose of a nation is the realization of human aspirations. It is in pursuance of man's dreams or desire for happiness, prosperity, self-expression, ecological development, self fulfilment and his insatiable and unending desire for self-discovery and maximization of his intellectual physical and spiritual abilities.

All these, man knows, he cannot attain or achieve in isolation but in his relationship with like-minded creatures.

The purpose of States on the other hand is to form such associations, providing and establishing justice, domestic tranquility, common defense, promote general welfare and secure their postulated ethnicity for themselves and their posterity. It is to enact laws and provide force in ensuring that defined limits are not exceeded.

As a people, we have attained statehood but we are yet to achieve nationhood. Why, in spite of government efforts, should the GDP (Gross Domestic Product) of African nations continue to drown? Why their per-capita income is so embarrassingly low compared to others? The answer lies in the fact that their Gross Mental Attitude is wrong. The answer lies in the fact that their 'Gross Mental Output' is horrendously low.

The answer is aggressive educational policy and programmes. The educational policies and programmes in African nations must be reviewed to foster intellectual and environmental productivity. We have our roles to play as individuals. There is individual social responsibility.

In spite of the odds, we must learn to appreciate our gains in Africa. In Nigeria particularly, in spite of cheap propaganda against our country, Nigeria, I tell you, is still among the freest countries in the world. There are those who may argue with that but many of us have travelled around the world, and we can tell you it's true.

We must be grateful for our opportunities so far: many of us should be grateful for the scholarships we received, the education, the environment, and even the wonderful, peace-loving people of Nigeria with whom we have been associated.

Many of us have benefited from the structure of our society, whether you love it or hate it. We must now give back to it. This thinking is the beginning of the birth of nationhood-the idea that we owe our society something; that we owe our nation something.

We must not resign ourselves to always call out for help and handouts; reaching out to be given something by government or government representatives. We must make a solemn decision to play on the field, to become involved and be spectators no more. We must gladly render service and seek to improve our society. We must dream bigger and higher to create for ourselves and posterity a more secure, prosperous, virile and egalitarian society.

It is sad that at this time of our odyssey of self-realization as a nation, major corporations and business establishments have not committed themselves to the infrastructural development of the country, the country from which they have so graciously benefited.

No wonder the outcry in the Nigeria Niger Delta is getting louder, though unheeded. I call on major business organizations and corporations in Nigeria to help fund education as a testimony of their commitment to our evolution to nationhood and the realization of our dream of transition from third-world to first. It is their responsibility to give back to a nation from which they have received so much.

We are grateful for the opportunity and the privilege that we have had as a nation to transit from military regimes to becoming a democracy.

Democracy is beautiful, if and when a State achieves nationhood. Until and unless a State has transited from statehood to nationhood, the gains of democracy, if at all present, will be minimal. And this is the dilemma of many African countries who have embraced democracy.

Many in their bid to salvage their situation championed nationalism instead of pursuing nationhood. It is made clear that nationhood and nationalism are neither synonymous nor do they serve the same purpose.

Though nationalism in its true and positive sense is laudable, it is important for us to realize that in our world today, savage nationalism is the same spirit of racism, resulting in such despicable acts of the American black history, South African Apartheid, and ethnic cleansing of Eastern Europe, and [Central] Africa's Rwanda.

These evils are the result of nationalism where it is defined by blood, language, culture and history. We have to realize that nationalism, where it is so defined by our relationship through language, or culture or blood, has only led men to their untimely graves and fractured societies.

Our nation will not escape such fractures if we define ourselves according to our historical origins rather than our purpose, our vision. The perversion of Nationalism is the absence of national purpose; in many nations today, through Nationalism, we have a disguised resurgence of medieval tribal wars.

Nationhood is different. In Nationhood, there's mutual respect and respect for citizens' rights. We must remember that democracy is borne of the idea that citizens have a right to choose by whom and how they should be governed.

And at this particular time in our country, it has become so important that we realize what democracy has granted us: the right to decide who governs us and how we shall be governed.

Of course, it has been a slow journey, a slow process, because most of us are children and grand-children of military officers, and we were brought up to be militant in nature.

But the time has come for us to settle for the change that has come upon us, the change that we have all embraced. And by that change our language must change; our perceptions must change; our respect for law and order must change; and of course, the law must change to favour its citizens.

Democracy comes with a citizens' Bill of Rights, even though ours remains largely undeclared. But I call on every smart thinking person to study the Constitution of the federal Republic of Nigeria, so at least you understand what your rights are; what you can do and what you may be forbidden to do.

Democracy thrives in informed and educated and enlightened societies. Dictatorship thrives in ignorant societies. We must therefore, embrace education. We cannot wait until we have the best of situations.

We cannot wait to have the best of conditions to read a book. We must choose to be informed; we must choose to open our minds and get educated.

THERE IS THE 'DO-IT-YOURSELF' ATTITUDE THAT WE MUST HAVE. EACH ONE OF US MUST BE WILLING TO EDUCATE HIMSELF, ONLY THAT WAY CAN WE BE INVOLVED IN NATION BUILDING. NO ONE ELSE WILL BUILD NIGERIA FOR US; NIGERIA WILL BE BUILT BY NIGERIANS.

To build a nation, we must recognize the concomitant sub-nations; these are the micro-ethno systems that function within the sovereign nation. It is the development of these micro-ethno systems that increases a nation's gross national product, its per-capita income, and therefore its citizens' standard of life. Micro-ethno systems are usually frustrated in States that are yet to understand, much less metamorphose into nationhood.

True nations by their very definition must inter-relate. As this is true of nations, it is also true of their micro-ethno systems. And these systems are inter-related and inter-dependent.

It is important to know that each of us functions with one or more of these sub-nations, without which our relevance in the larger society will be grossly impaired.

Individuals and indeed nations attain financial and economic independence through these relationships that nurture demand and supply.

Your ability to analyze, interpret and apply these simple principles is your opportunity in today's world.

Most African countries are built on ideas and ideals of yesterday's philosophies.

We need today's thinkers for tomorrow's visions.

When I look at the young people, I see extraordinary resources. I see wealth and greatness. I see the best doctors, the best sportsmen, the best engineers.

In America, the black boys who were picked from the slums became some of the best basket ballers; America has largely left that game for the tall black boys. The stout ones went into boxing and became the best. They have left sport for the black and Africans.

Let me tell you a secret: your excellence and your abilities are not limited to sports. It is time to include the discipline to go beyond sports and produce the best books, the best schools, the best hospitals.

We can set the pace and grow an extraordinary economy in Africa to translate and transit from third world to first world. We can do it. And we will.

TRIBUTE TO BOSEMAN CHADWICK

1976 – 2020

ABOUT HIM

Chadwick Aaron Boseman (November 29, 1976 – August 28, 2020) was an American actor. Born and raised in South Carolina, he took up acting professionally after he studied directing at Howard University. In 2016, Boseman was diagnosed with colon cancer. Boseman kept his condition private, continuing to pursue his acting career while receiving treatment. After a four-year battle, he died in 2020 from complications related to the illness.

Boseman became the first black superhero to get his own standalone film in the record-breaking Marvel franchise with 2018's "Black Panther."

"A true fighter, Chadwick persevered through it all and filmed projects "during and between countless surgeries and chemotherapy," the family's statement said.

Inspite of the chemo and the surgeries, you were always steady on the inspiration you delivered through the character of T'Challa. Rest in Power. Wakanda forever

Death is not the end, as you taught but surely we would miss you. The inspiration you delivered through the Black Panther would remain evergreen. Wakanda Forever

Peace's Thoughts

If that was the case then it will be different.
If I didn't have to ask for wings to fly then I will be floating
If it wasn't so high, I would be at the pinnacle.
If the savanna was so fruitful then I won't be in the desert.
If the stakes were not so high, I won't go for the cheap.
If I was aware, I won't be unaware
If I had, I would not ask
If I was found, I would not hide
If I wasn't captive, I will be free
If I was loved, I would not hate
If I was not lost, I would stay secure
If I had food, I wouldn't be so hungry
If I didn't have so much tears, I won't cry
If I knew the way, I wouldn't move in circles
If I had sleep, I wouldn't toss and turn
If I had happiness, I won't be so sad
If the pond wasn't so full, I won't be in the ocean

If I had someone, I wouldn't wish to be so lonely
If I wasn't so tired, I would continue to run
If there wasn't so much hatred, i would continue to love
If the noise wasn't so much, I would be heard Let my soul rest from all the troubles that keep haunting me.
Release me from the dungeon of darkness.
Thrown to the deepest seas without trace.
I wouldn't be inspired by sadness if I found a little happiness
If it were up to me, i would do more
If I had more.

Dairy of a Rising Female

My thoughts are actually what I pen down, so join me as I take you on the journey of Me.

I have been able to hide my fears, broken state, troubled heart and periled soul from the eyes of the world.

Yes, I have!

To a lot, I'm that strong Rising Female who's been able to achieve so much, and reach some heights of greatness. To others, I have got the ideal life they crave. Some even see me as a role model and others imitate me.

They come to me with their issues, I sort them out. I'm a shoulder to cry on, a big heart who's open to all. I can be everything they want at any time. I'm that friend you can always choose to count on. I'm always there for everybody, but no one seems to be there when I need them.

Hey Teen Viber!!!

It's Me, your Rising Female.

I intend breaking tables today (Lol) and Fixing Tables too. I'm going to be very blunt (I have always been, right?)

Today on the journey of Me, I would want us to stop at the door of Relationship Building. Yes, mind you when I talk about relationships, it includes a host of things starting from the way you relate to your boss at work, to your family, superiors, mentors, church leaders and all. But for today, I will be focusing on Friendships

You do know that the friends you keep determines how far you will go and how well you will do, right? I listened to someone say if you have five rich friends that makes you the sixth rich friend. Likewise, if you have five foolish friends, that also makes you the sixth foolish friend.

I don't mean to hurt you, but I have to be blunt with you today because I truly Love you.

Am I to show how broken I can get sometimes? Am I to let them know I get weak too?

Do they realize I'm human?

I practically juggle between 2 jobs, online classes and more; yet, they don't think there are days I sit down in the bathroom and all I do is cry my eyes out, wash my face, apply powder, look myself in the mirror and say, You are coming out strong. When I come out, all they see is that pretty female on her heels, flaunting her hair and wearing a big smile and rendering help to all those who need it.

I get broken too!

I need a hug sometimes!

Please check up on me by calling; even a text would do.....

I want a shoulder to cry on too, a lot of times!

I become beclouded by so many things a lot of times.

I want to be loved also!

This is dedicated to every Teenager out there who's having to deal with a lot of experiences physically which breaks you down. To every Teenager who's being the best for everyone else, yet seem not to get the same value in return

You are Loved!

A GIFT

just for you

From Uzezi
Thread

At fourteen years-old I had a girl that I crush
The teenage fears, the adrenaline and the rush
I could not face it all and the heart formed with butterflies
Freely flying in my belly as the rhythm of my heart rise
Her face is compelling and beautiful is her smile
You may ask, did this girl get to know of these feelings?
I'm afraid I'll have to say, No, they did not get past a mile.

Let's go back to the time I was twelve years old
She's in a class I dared not go towards the road
Her position scared me, her company threatened to
But courage reared me knowing she was a girl to woo
Told me I was not ready but it was okay to like her
You may say it will be steady with life as former?
No, the attraction was heady, perhaps, future better.

My crush became my friend as I anticipated
Like the first trend I ever created
She became the girl I never wanted to see down
Her angelic face cry, nor the shape if a frown
She was my inspiration and affection
You may say since she was your friend, did she know?
Yes, I smile when she had me to the wall in question

Did you guys continue as mere best mates?
Or you proceeded into a relationship with dates
Perhaps in it would be a lot of hugs and kisses
And restless mind when someone misses
Nah, despite she knew, we did not proceed
Why? I was scared and still felt unprepared Deeds of my responsibility which were thought to be seeds.

Reflecting back how badly I wanted to walk home,
Together with her, holding hands in reality alone
How long I wanted to stay in the birthday hug she granted
Even though I did not get the chance to get a point darted
I long for that day we'll be together in love

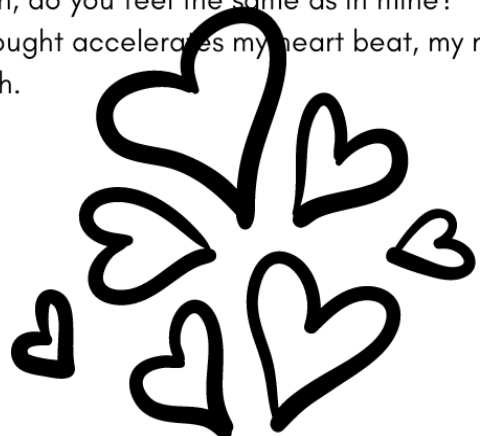

She became inhabited continuously in my thought
I thought it was strong and impenetrable
She unlocked it. I was wrong but she was able
But we were friends jolly and merry
Why? Did you make it a thought pendant
What would I have done? I couldn't face it to the very.

At fifteen, she became my first girl bestie
Series of event that year? It was the best thing
We'd make short break up. Don't- talk- to- me fights
It will go longer than I could makeup until I came too light
Going to be first I will render my apologies
Tell me, what happened next? Did she accept?
With a smile, of course they inspired secret logic.

I never won once in these fights of ours once
Because she was the master, knowing how it runs
She could have me wrapped in the finger of hers
And I will be stock, thinking of her for hours
She was this and that she was these, she was those.
Hmm you may say this poet is getting lovelorn
Maybe not, provided this fire in my heart grows.

Days like valentine and her birthday would come
They'd give me a new ray of inspiration so calm
Though I'd never presented a gift in monetary terms
But I was sure of getting inspired in greater realms
I'm not sure she'd see it the way it pictures
Why'd you say such? Why don't you give it a shot?
Nah, I'm still very much afraid of emotional torture.

Writing this I dare say I'm so love lost
Not wanting to say lovelorn. It's much of a cost
I really hope these crazy feelings will be shared
This is what .. Courage sad.....must not be feared
I want you to be mine, to love and cherish
My crush, do you feel the same as in mine?
That thought accelerates my heart beat, my mind?
Feverish.
